Moving From Probation To Graduation: 10 Strategies For Success

Wednesday, December 12 ~ 1:00-2:00pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

Students head off to college with the best of intentions and with dreams of independence, new experiences, and the hope of new friendships. But for some students, the critical first-semester poses many challenges, grades suffer, and the student may face academic probation or academic suspension. This can be devastating to the student, but it doesn't have to be.

Academic probation is an uncomfortable situation, but it doesn't mean that the student can't be successful. Why do some students succeed academically in future semesters, while others do not? Students who view probation as a warning or a wake-up call rather than a punitive measure by the institution can partner with the institution to analyze what has created their difficulty and put together a plan for success. Using a holistic approach, the student can take the necessary steps to change their habits, to improve their skills, and to utilize their resources to change their overall academic standing with the college. Although the responsibility belongs to the student, colleges can help students to accept responsibility honestly and find ways to make changes. Webinar participants will be introduced to a set of comprehensive strategies to assist committed probationary students so that they can move from probation to graduation.

Objectives:

- Investigate strategies to identify student deficiencies that are preventing academic success
- Explore opportunities to utilize "coaches" for students who are struggling academically
- Identify a series of relevant study strategy workshops
- Investigate ten strategies that may be integrated within the institution to assist committed students
- Discuss the shift in terminology and learning theory related to probationary students
